Logistically Speaking

We know you are under constant pressure to remove costs from the system and be more competitive in your neighborhood. That's why Omni is always at work to reduce logistics costs, and remove any excess costs from our systems to save you that dollar without substituting the high quality Omni represents.

We do a logistics review on every order placed into our distribution channel. Whether we are shipping containers, truckloads, or LTL (less than truckload), every order is not only checked, but double checked to make sure we are using the right channel, the best carrier, and the most efficient shipping lane.

We pride ourselves on that last point. You can always save money by focusing on costs. However, we analyze each shipment to make sure extra cost saved can also mean a possible shipping day saved as well.

And remember, the earlier your orders reach our Customer Service Team, the more likely they are to ship the same day. Generally we can ship your order the same day IF you have it into us by 10:30 AM.

Speaking of Shipping!

Even though most of us are wondering whether Winter will ever arrive (and it's 45 degrees and raining in Florida—actually warmer in New Hampshire at this writing), you still need to allot for an extra day or two through March for your shipments due to the fact that an unusual occurrence this year, SNOW, may appear. Our contract logistics firms do their best, but Mother Nature can still win. So give yourself that extra padding day "just in case".

New Business

Omni International keeps strong inventory levels at our distribution centers. However, sometimes you reward us with some very large orders. And that's OK! However, if some of those very large orders turn into re-orders and firm annualized business for you, we need to know.

It can take time for us to adjust inventory levels in our distribution centers from the factories overseas. And it takes about a week to move inventory between our Centers in PA and WA.

So that our "Logistics" can help you all the time, let us know when you have sent great new business our way. Then we can all be winners.
